

Build

The open-source learn-by-shipping community for people building real products with AI agents.

The Problem

- Passive learning — courses exist but most people don't ship.
- No shared workflow for agent-first teams.
- Isolated builders without co-builders or accountability.
- Powerful AI tools, but no community lifecycle to tie them together.

Our Solution

- Ship real products in the open with builders at all skill levels.
- AI agents as first-class team members, not just coding assistants.
- A shared, evolving methodology — we capture what works.
- GitHub-native ops: Issues, PRs, and markdown are the source of truth.

Existing Solutions — and Why Build is Different

Solution	Gap	Build Advantage
Online courses / bootcamps	Passive; ends at graduation	Persistent, real shipping, ongoing community
Accelerators	Expensive, exclusive, short-term cohort	Open to all skill levels, no cost barrier
Open-source contribution	Steep onboarding; rarely agent-native	Agent-native from day 0; guided methodology
Discord / Slack communities	Discussion-heavy; no structured build process	GitHub-native ops; ship first, then discuss
Hackathons	Short burst; projects die after the weekend	Persistent quests; ongoing parties; real launches

Unique Advantages

Agent-native from day 0 — Agents are collaborators, not just assistants.

Open-source everything — Code, methodology, and lessons are all public.

Human-first MMO model — Quests, parties, XP — keeps builders engaged.

Real products — Quest Board is our dogfooded example.

GitHub-native — No extra platform; Issues & PRs are the source of truth.

Learn by shipping — Fastest path: build real things in public.

Pilot Project: Quest Board

A GitHub-native, spec-first board where humans and AI agents propose, rank, build, and launch open-source projects together.

This is Build's first quest — and its proof of concept.
